Poe A Life Cut Short

Peter Ackroyd's 'Poe-A Life Cut Short' is not the size of other biographies of his that I have read in the past, being all over in one hundred and sixty pages. The first biography of Poe was written shortly after his death in 1849, by Rufus Griswold, who portrayed the man as 'a drunken womanizing madman with no morals and no friends'.

Hippocrates's classic pronouncement that life is short but art is long could have been coined with Edgar Allan Poe in mind. Although he died in 1849 at age 40, his literary legacy endures - not just in lugubrious stories and poems like "The Tell-Tale Heart" and "Annabel Lee," but in his influence on literature, including 19th-century French Romantic poetry and detective and science fiction.
